D. Read the passage and answer the following questions with complete sentences. (根据短文内容回答下列问题) (7 分)

What kind of vehicle (工具) will you choose when travelling between provinces (省)? Many people may like travelling by train because it's safer and cheaper. Now the high-speed railways have connected (连接) eastern and western China as well as the south and the north.

A new high-speed railway opened on Sept. 10th, 2016. It connects Zhengzhou in Henan Province with Xuzhou in Jiangsu Province. With this railway, China's high-speed railways are over 20,000 kilometres long. It is the world's longest and makes up 60 percent of the world's total (全部的) high-speed railway lines.

Besides length, China also does better in speed. China is the only country with trains running at 350 kilometres an hour, such as the Beijing-Tianjin and Beijing-Shanghai high-speed railways.

With these surprising numbers, it is easy to forget that China wasn't the first in the high-speed rail game. Japan started 50 years ago, while Germany did 20 years ago. China only began to build its high-speed railways 14 years ago.

China's high-speed railways are developing (发展) fast now. Behind it, there is the country's growing need for transportation. China's high-speed trains gave 961 million trips to people last year.

"The high-speed railways not only bridge the distance (距离), but connect people, information and goods," said Huang Xin, an official from the China Railway Corp. Yet, China's building of high-speed railways is still going on. China plans to have 38,000 kilometres of high-speed railways by 2025.

76. Why may many people like travelling between provinces by train according to the passage? (1 %)

77. How long have China's high-speed railways been since Sept. 10th, 2016? (1 分)

78. How fast is the Beijing-Tianjin high-speed train? (1 分)

79. Which country is the first one to build the high-speed railways? (1 %)

80. China's building of high-speed railways isn't still going on, is it? (1 分)

81. If you want to go to Beijing for the coming holidays, what kind of vehicle will you choose? Why? (2 %)
